It’s Time, LSD TIME

Due to the new bill enacted by President Keeley Akagi, all U.S. citizens entering the third grade will be required to take a hallucinogen on the first day!

Get excited to feel empowered
8 years old!

We are continuing in our fight against violence, discrimination, and sexism!

It is a time of change. In past years we have found that this policy lowers crime rates and overall makes citizens of the U.S. happier. We used to live in a country of hate and disgust but I as President for a second term am ready to fill that void with love and experiences. It’s time to open your mind to the important things in life. World War 3 destroyed so much hope in humanity, but this policy is implemented to bring the U.S. back to a loving country. We no longer believe in fighting and death, we believe in diplomacy and love for life.
How it was introduced?

When I first implemented this policy 6 years ago in my first term it was scary but it seemed everyone was looking for a way out of life. WW3 broke our lust for life, our patriotic spirit. The policy states that all U.S. citizens that are documented, over the age of 8, are required to come into a government-issued building and experience a hallucinogen, and it is fully government-funded. If you are not able to reach a government building then the medication will be brought to you. If you refuse to take the hallucinogen, extreme measures will be taken to make sure you have an equally eye-opening experience. In a recent study at Stanford University, children (aged 10-18), report higher happiness ratings than ever seen before. I, President Akagi believe this is a positive policy because it shows an immediate decrease in anger and rage and an increase in happiness reported. There is little danger to this policy and the benefits do outweigh the consequences. So if you are going into third grade this year, get excited!
